GRADUATE PROGRAM

The Graduate Program, stricto sensu, at the School of Education began in 1971. In 2014 it has 671 regular students (400 doctorates and 291 masters), and 117 registered professors. Since its creation, approximately 1,308 theses and 1461 dissertations were defended in this Graduate Program.

Also in 2014, 122 scholarships were granted by several research support agencies, among them CAPES (62), FAPESP (34), and CNPq (26). It is listed among the best programs in Brazil, according to the CAPES Assessment Index. It has two complementary goals:

- to develop research and to prepare researchers for the education field, including themes related to teaching systems and their several levels and modalities, and the multiple social spheres in which education is present;

- to prepare researchers-professors for College Education.

10 Research Lines are part of the Graduate Program at the School of Education: Culture, Organization and Education; Didactics, Teaching Theories and School Practices; Special Education; Teaching of Sciences and Mathematics; State, Society and Education; Philosophy of Education; History of Education and Historiography; Language and Education; Psychology and Education; and Sociology and Education.
